

Anna focuses her practice on Alaska Native Tribal, Corporate, and Natural Resources legal issues. She serves as corporate counsel to Alaska Native Corporations throughout the State and advises clients on Board governance and ANCSA-related issues including descendant enrollment and stock inheritance and gift transfers. Anna also works closely with Tribes and Tribal organizations on fisheries and marine mammal legal issues, including subsistence harvest eligibility and co-management relationships with State and Federal agencies. She approaches problems rationally and holistically and always strives to reach practical, workable solutions.

In addition to her organizational practice, Anna routinely litigates claims on behalf of her clients in Alaska's State and Federal courts. She frequently represents institutional clients in real property litigation and represents small contractors advancing or defending against contract claims. She also represents Alaska tribes seeking to protect and advance their subsistence hunting and fishing rights.

Prior to joining LBB, she clerked for the Honorable Anna M. Moran of the Alaska Superior Court in Kenai, Alaska. She also worked as a Public Defender in the Tulalip Tribal Court in Tulalip, Washington, and defended tribal members against misdemeanor criminal charges.
