About

Andy is an experienced litigator with a focus on natural resources, administrative law, and appellate law. He collaborates with his colleagues and clients to understand complex problems and to research effective solutions.

Andy has successfully litigated cases throughout Alaska on behalf of Alaska Native Corporations and Alaska Tribes, including cases involving subsistence hunting and fishing rights. He currently represents several Alaska Native entities in lawsuits against the State of Alaska seeking to protect customary and traditional uses of fish and game.

Before joining Landye Bennett Blumstein, Andy was a law clerk for the Alaska Supreme Court and worked as a policy fellow in the U.S. Senate, focusing on natural resource issues in the West. He has a master's degree in environmental policy from Oxford University and is a 2007 Harry S. Truman Scholar from Montana.
