Andy is an experienced litigator with a focus on administrative practice, corporate and municipal law, Alaska Native subsistence law, and appeals. He has been a partner at Landye Bennett Blumstein since 2024.

Andy has successfully litigated cases on behalf of Alaska Native Corporations and Alaska Tribes at all levels of the Alaska state and federal courts, including defending Alaska Native subsistence hunting and fishing rights. He currently represents several Alaska Native entities and individuals in lawsuits aimed at protecting customary and traditional uses of fish and game throughout the state.

Before joining Landye Bennett Blumstein as an associate in 2016, Andy served as a law clerk for the Alaska Supreme Court and worked as a policy fellow in the U.S. Senate, focusing on natural resource issues in the West. He has a law degree from Lewis & Clark Law School and a master's degree in environmental policy from Oxford University. Andy is a 2007 Harry S. Truman Scholar from Montana.
