About

Henry focuses his practice on bankruptcy, creditors' rights, and business law. His approach combines careful legal analysis with attention to the economic considerations that shape a client's options. He emphasizes practical solutions informed by the costs, risks, and objectives of each matter.

Before entering private practice, he clerked in the Eastern District of New York, where he developed a strong understanding of bankruptcy litigation and antecedent foreclosure, loan modification, and attachment law. Working in one of the highest-volume bankruptcy courts in the country, he is intimately familiar with each step of the lifecycle of distressed debt collections from state court foreclosures to first day motions and contested plan confirmations.

In law school, Henry was a Sandra Day O'Connor scholarship recipient, member of the debate team, and wrote for New England Law Review. He is fluent in Spanish and earned the Seal of Bilingualism.
